ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

The following is provided for information only:

Question: Is it permissible to dig floatation channel(s) from the Illinois River and the Mississippi River to the project to be utilized for barge delivery of materials? If so, where can we dispose of the excavated materials.

Response: Excavating channels to gain river access to the Calhoun Point project area is feasible and likely permissible pending details of how much, to what extent and where the excavation channels will be located. It is probable that this activity can be authorized, pending review of the details by the Regulatory Office, by modifying the existing Section 10/404 permit for the project. Materials disposal would also require review and approval. The likely possibilities for disposal of the excavation material are to, haul off site to a contractor acquired disposal area or to incorporate the material into the levee/berm or other fill materials required for the project, providing that the materials would meet the requirements as stated in the specifications. Placement of materials into any of the disposal areas identified in the plans would require evaluation and would be limited to lines and grades shown on the drawing. Creating new disposal areas within the project limits will not be granted.
